YOUTH IS FATALLY INJURED BY AUTO

Raymond Rovengo, of 540 Angus avenue, San Bruno, was the victim of an unusual accident in Daly City on Thursday evening of last week, about 8:40 o'clock, which resulted in his death, the young man passing away at the South San Francisco hospital, where he had been taken by Officer James Reardon, of Daly City, following the accident.

Young Rovengo, who was but 21 years of age, was employed in the Macmar store at San Bruno. While visiting some friends on Wellington avenue, he met with the accident which caused his death a few hours later. Rovengo had parked his car at the curb on Wellington avenue. When he decided to return to his home he found that he had to crank the car in order to get it started. He had evidently left the car in gear, and when he cranked it the machine started and pushed the unfortunate young man across the curb and against the stairs of the Clark home, where he had been visiting.

A call came to the officer on duty that a man had broken his leg, and and ambulance was needed. Officer Reardon, upon reaching the scene of the accident, found that the man had been moved into the house. Before taking the injured man to the hospital it was considered best to have a local physician attend the sufferer. Following an examination the patient was removed to the hospital.

Mrs. W. P. Clark telephoned to the boy's mother, and she came to the home where he had been injured, but when she arrived the young man had already been taken to the hospital. Upon her arrival at the hospital she learned that her son was dead.

The body was removed to the Lasswell mortuary about midnight. Death came as a result of internal injuries to the lower portion of the body. The left leg had been broken in three places by the impact of the heavy car. Interment was in the Italian cemetery on July 4, following a mass in S. S. Peter and Paul's church.

Besides his parent, young Rovengo leaves a brother, Andrew Rovengo, and a host of friends to mourn his untimely passing.

Home Padlocked Pending Investigation as to Blaze

Early morning stillness was broken on July 4 at 3:15 o'clock, when the fire siren blew loud and shrill. The call was answered by all the fire companies of Daly City, and the home of Pietro Arcuri, at 852 Hanover street, was found ablaze, in every room a seething fury. The members of the Arcuri family were away from home, visiting friends in San Jose, having left home at 7:30 A. M. on July 3, and did not return until 10:30 P. M., the night of the 4th, according to a statement made by Arcuri. The alarm was turned in by a neighbor.

An investigation was conducted by Chief of Police John T. Doyle and Fire Chief John Kennedy and Assistant Chief Chesney. The clues obtained as a result of this investigation were rags, a cushion, and a bath mat, all saturated with coaloil; also a fuse attached to a flask containing coaloil. The carpets on the floor showed evidence of coaloil saturation. The articles named are being held by officials pending further investigation.

Chief of Police Doyle took the home owner, Arcuri, to Redwod City, where he was further questined by Assistant District Attorney Bell.

B. W. Glendening, agent of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, is conducting an investigation in conjunction with Chief of Police Doyle. Arcuri appeared before Doyle for further questioning last Thursday at 10 A. M. The house has been padlocked by Chief of Police Doyle pending the outcome of the investigation.

Rev. John W. Falconer in Presbyterian Church

On Sunday, July 10, Rev. John W. Falconer will be the speaker in Grace Presbyterian church, during the absence of the pastor. Mrs. Falconer, the well known Gospel singer, will be the soloist, both morning and evening services. Prayer meeting on Wednesday evening at 7:45 as usual. The church is located at Hanover and Evergreen.

Postage Rates Are Increased

The local Postmaster announces that, effective July 6, the rate of postage on all domestic first class mail (except postal cards and private mailing or post cards) will be three cents per counce or fraction thereof. Also effective July 6, the rate of postage on domestic air mail and air mail for Canada, Newfoundland (including Labrador), and Mexico, will be eight cents for the first ounce or fraction thereof, and thirteen cents for each additional ounce or fraction thereof.

VALUABLE TIP TO LEGION MEMBERS

Members of Daly City Post No. 410, American Legion, will hold their regular meeting tonight, Friday, July 8th.

All members of the American Legion should check up on the whereabouts of their discharge papers. In case of illness, could you or your wife produce your discharge papers? Before a veteran can be committed to a government hospital for treatment, a copy of his honorable discharge must be presented. This is the first and fundamental requirement, and is not overlooked, no matter how serious a case may be. If you do not know where this valuable paper is, a "Certificate in Lieu of Discharge" may be obtained from Washington, upon the proper application by the veteran. Your Post service officers can supply the forms.

Discharge may be recorded with any county treasurer, free of charge, and copies from these county records of the discharge may be obtained free of cost when they are to be used in connection with claims.

Before the Veterans Bureau will administer any insurance, or other moneys due, should death enter the family, the widow must produce a copy of her marriage certificate, birth certificates of all her children; and if divorced previous to her marriage to the veteran, a copy of her divorce decree must be submitted.

Many veterans have lost these valuable papers, moving about, seeking health or postions.

It might be well to spend the time and postage to secure copies of these very necessary papers, so that they will be available and at hand at all times, and should necessity arise, no delay will be encountered.

Members of Posts in the south, particularly in Los Angeles county, are much interested in the proposition of establishing a Southern California branch of department headquarters in Los Angeles.

The contention, as set forth in a recent editorial in the Los Angeles County Legion Bulletin, is that the business of the department is getting so heavy that a southern office is practically a necessity, and it is pointed out that Patriotic Hall, centrally located in Los Angeles, should house the proposed offices.

The Legionnaires of the south maintain that their contribution to the department in the way of membership is rapidly reaching the point where the seven districts south of the Tsehachapis is equal to that of the fifteen districts of the north.

They contend that the department commander coming from the south every alternate year, is forced to spend much time and money needlessly in contacting distant state headquarters in San Francisco.

While no action has been taken at any of the district meetings, it is reported that several resolutions covering the subject may be presented during the coming Oakland convention. Many interested in the proposal are already visiting posts of Los Angeles county in an attempt to muster sufficient strength to force a vote against expected opposition from northern posts.

Communion-Installation Coming K. of C. Events

The members of Daly City Council No. 2712, K. of C., will receive their quarterly Holy Communion at St. Michael's church, on Broad street in Ocean View, at 7 o'clock on Sunday, July 17. Breakfast will be served for those in attendance in the parish hall.

The installation of new officers will take place in Eagles Hall on Tuesday evening, July 19, and the following officers will be installed: Grand Knight, Ernest Cuneo; Deputy Grand Knight, Eugene J. Greene; Chancellor, George Lombard; Warden, Walter Manning; Lecturer, Nick Sambraillo; Advocate, John J. Fahey, Jr.; Recorder, Robert E. Cullen; Treasurer, William J. Sweeney, Jr.; Financial Secretary, B. G. Kost; Trustee, James Bierne; Inside Guard, Arthur J. Royal; Outside Guard, Walter L. Murphy.

Driver Averts Collision But Overturns Truck

M. C. Overstreet, of 1481 Eddy street, San Francisco, while driving a Dodge truck for Hale Bros., received serious injuries in an attempt on his part to avert an accident at Moltke and Mission streets, last Tuesday afternoon, at 4:10 o'clock. Young Oversteet sought to turn the Dodge into Moltke street to avoid bitting a Ford truck driven by William Grimwald, of 66 Geary street. The Dodge truck was overturned, and Overstreet was taken to the South San Francisco hospital, where it was learned that the young man was suffering from a badly cut left wrist.

EATING MUSSELS MAY CAUSE DEATH

"To eat mussels at this season of the year is absolutely unsafe and may cause acute illness, if not death," is the summary of a warning issued jointly by Dr. Giles S. Porter, director of the California Department of Public Health, Dr. K. F. Meyer, director of the Hooper Foundation for Medical Research, and Dr. J. C. Geiger, city health officer of San Francisco.

In spite of warnings issued repeatedly during the past six weeks, nearly twenty cases, one of which caused death, have been reported, and it is apparent that several more deaths will occur in this group of cases. The three officials are emphatic in their statement and urge close observance of their warning to the general public.

Dr. J. C. Geiger, city health officer of San Francisco, has reported most of the cases of mussel poisoning that have occurred this season. All of these cases are in persons who ate mussels gathered along the coast of San Mateo, Sonoma, and Mendocino counties. Dr. Giles S. Porter, director of the California Department of Public Health, has issued repeated warnings to the health officers of the state and to the press. In spite of these warnings, cases continue.

People who have eaten poisonous mussels notice a tingling or numbness around the lips and a prickly feeling in the toes and finger-tips after eating. Such persons should empty the stomach by means of an emetic, purge the intestinal tract by brisk laxatives, and call a physician immediately. Even mild cases of mussel poisoning should be reported to local health officers at once. To avoid illness, don't eat mussels at this season of the year. Failure to observe this warning may result in suffering and possible death.

During the summer months these shellfish develop a poisonous condition which generally reaches its maximum state about the middle of July. They become less toxic as the season advances, and during the winter are practically free of their toxins. A quarantine which prohibits the sale, or offering for sale, of mussels was established by the California Board of Public Health on May 28. This will not be lifted until September 30, and it applies to the entire California coast from Monterey county to the Klamath river.

PASSING OF POPULAR DALY CITY RESIDENT

The many friends of Mrs. Agnes Taylor Gowland, of Westlake avenue, were shocked to hear of her sudden death last Saturday after a very brief illness. Mrs. Gowland, accompanied by a group of friends and her daughter Miss Daisy Gowland, visited Sutro Baths last Friday. While in the water Mrs. Gowland was stricken with a slight stroke. After a short time she left for her home, not feeling so well, but not really alarmed. On Saturday she suffered another stroke and passed to the great beyond.

Mrs. Gowland leaves a host of friends who will miss her, and mourn the loss of her lively presence, besides a beloved husband, James Gowland, and a beloved daughter and son, Daisy and John Gowland.

Mrs. Gowland was a member of Crocker Chapter, O. E. S., and the Royal Neighbors.

The funeral was conducted from the mortuary chapel of W. C. Lasswell & Co., last Tuesday morning at 11:30 oclock. Interment was in Olivet Memorial Park.

LEGION CREATES ONE MILLION JOBS

The American Legion's objective in creating one million jobs for unemployed workers has been accomplished, it has been announced by Mark T. McKee, of Detroit, executive director of the Legion National Employment Commission. McKee is in California on a swing around the nation checking up on the results of one of the greatest drives since World war days.

"A million jobs have been found throughout the country since the campaign started in February," said McKee. "California made a remarkable showing in securing work for the unemployed, and stands second in the list of jobs created, being exceeded only by New York.

"Even though we have reached the objective, no armistice is to be signed in this war against depression. The national unemployment today is in a worse postion than when we started the drive. Statistics showed at that time there were eight million men without jobs. We created a million jobs and in addition $51,000,000 is made to work. Today there are eleven million men unemployed. The work of finding jobs must be continued. Opportunities must be made for every American to earn a livelihood.

"Our next step will be the consideration of the five day or 30 hour week. The adoption of this system throughout the nation will give employment to six million workers. An industrial advisory council comprising twenty-five of the leading business executives in the country and a labor advisory council headed by Mathew Wohl, president of the American Federation of Labor, has been selected by the Legion to consider placing this plan in effect.

"Creating one million jobs was no easy work. The success of the effort was largely due to the splendid cooperation received by the Legion from the American Federation of Labor, Association of National Advertisers, business executives and the newspapers. No preference was given in the campaign to veterans. The object was to give every wage-earner the opportunity to earn a wage to support his family."

Local Belgians to Observe Independence Anniversary

Belgians residing in the Bay district will celebrate the one hundred and second anniversary of their independence, on Saturday evening, July 23, according to Remi Sanders, of Woodrow street, chairman of the committee. A dinner-dance will be held at the California Club, 1750 Clay street. The Consul General of Belgium will be the principal speaker. Nearly a hundred Belgians attended a meeting held on Thursday night of last week, at the California Club, when final arrangements were discussed.

BASEBALL GAME NEXT SUNDAY

The Daly City Eagles baseball team will play their first game in three weeks this coming Sunday, on the Jefferson Union high school grounds, the game to commence at 2 P. M. The Mountain View N. S. G. W. team will be the opposing team. The country town boys boast of a great record for the season, so a good game shuld be the result. A few new faces will appear in the lineup of the local team.

After winning eight straight games the local Eagle team lost their last game, two weeks ago, to their brother Eagles from San Francisco.

SCOUTS MAKE USE OF LEISURE TIME

A recent report of a certain Police Commissioner of a large city in the United States throws an interesting light on the relationship of leisure time to the crime conditions of this great country.

There has been a startling gain in youthful criminals, and the relationship between this sort of gain and the way these boys have employed their leisure time is quite obvious. Activities of an anti-social and destructive nature, through the operation of youthful gangs are in striking contrast to the constructive, patriotic and definitely social program of boys engaged in Scouting.

In past years the criminal at the "line-up" was middle-aged, intemperate, experienced in crime, and limited to certain activites of a specal type of offense. Today, it is just the opposite, and in the "line-up" presents a parade of youths ranging in ages from 16 to 21, versatile in crime, who cold-bloodedly and calmly recite voluntarily, in the presence of spectators and the press, the most intimate details of the planning and execution of ruthless crimes.

In contrast to this presentation, we are proud of our leisure time program of Scouting, now being enjoyed by more than 600,000 Scouts, which teaches boys, through games and woodcraft, to do useful things for themselves and for others.

It should be evey boy's ambition to be a Scout, and we have plenty of room for those desiring to employ their spare time learning to do something that will be useful to themselves in later years. It is proposed to install another Scout Troop in Daly City in the near future, and prospective members are requested to get in touch with Scoutmasters Chester Smith or Al Brauns.

This Friday evening, July 8, through the courtesy of the Daly City Post No. 410, American Legion, a representative group of members from the Daly City District committee, Boy Scouts of America, have been invited to attend their meeting for the purpose of outlining the activities and principles of the Scout movement. The District committee appreciates such co-operation on the part of a local organization, and the speakers will endeavor to present a graphic picture of the field of endeavor in which the Scouters operate.

Registration of Voters Urged by V. F. W. Post

Because of the persistent efforts of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States during the past several years, every disabled World war veteran suffering from a physical handicap, to a degree of at least 25 per cent, is today entitled to receive either compensation or a pension from the United States government. This is merely one of the many reasons why every ex-service man should be affiliated with some veteran organization, and if he is an overseas veteran of any war in which America was involved, he owes it to himself and his dependents to become actively identified with the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States.

Plans to stimulate registration of all potential voters, especially among veterans and members of their families, are being formulated by Old Glory Post No. 2044, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States. The privilege of casting a ballot is one that every American citizen should exercise, and such a campaign will be launched in the hope of driving home this message to those who have been careless and negligent of their duty in the past.

Veterans in particular owe it to their community, as well as to themselves, to carry out this obligation that belongs to every American citizen. The ballot gives every voter an opportunity to express his or her views on issues that are of vital importance to the city, state and nation. The candidates for public office, whose programs embody the principles that are favored by any particular voter, are deserving of that voter's support at the polls.

Any man or woman who is entitled to cast a ballot and objects to the manner in which any particular office holder is fulfilling his duties, has this opportunity of voicing his or her protest. Every veteran should be especally anxious and prepared to cast his ballot against any public official who continually persists in ignoring the welfare of ex-service men and their dependents. A good demonstration of this type of politics was recently given at Washington when it became necessary to force a vote on the "bonus" by circulating a House petition.

The next regular meeting of Old Glory Post No. 2044, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, will be held in the Masonic Hall, this Friday evening, July 8.

BOARD VOTES FOR DRY LAW REPEAL

The members of the San Mateo county board of supervisors went on record last Tuesday as being in favor of the repeal of the Wright act, this state's prohibition enforcement measure. The resolution for repeal of the act was introduced by Supervisor Rosalie M. Brown of San Mateo, and seconded by Thomas L. Hickey of South San Francisco.

The resolution puts the county on record as favorable to the repeal of the state liquor enforcement measure. The request for endorsement was received from Matt I. Sullivan, head of the movement to have the measure taken from the statutes.

Pleas for reduction of county expenditures so that the tax rate could be lowered were received by the board from a number of civic organizations throughout the county. Several organizations asked the privilege of sitting in with the board when next year's budget is drawn.

At the suggestion of Assistant District Attorney Richard O. Bell, the board accepted the offer of the Southern Pacific for the protection of the crossing at Millbrae. Under the proposal accepted, the railroad will pay a third of the cost of installing signals at the crossing, maintain the signals, maintain the highway two feet each side of the track, and give the county a right-of-way deed across the track.

Attorney Bell informed the board that the county would be called upon to pay $3,000 as its share of installing the signal system which the railroad will maintain after it is installed. The railroad will pay some $1,500 toward the installation of the signals.

Members of the board received an invitation to exhibit the county's products at the World's Fair in Chicago. The request was referred to the San Mateo County Chamber of Commerce.

The Italian-American Club of San Mateo county asked the board to have dead grass burned along highways, so that motorists tossing lighted cigars or cigarettes from automobiles would not cause fires. The club was informed that this was already being done.

George Ames, of San Mateo, was awarded the contract for painting the interior of the tuberculosis pavilion at Community hospital. The cost will be $790, the board was informed.

Lomita Park's fire commission informed the board it would need $2,550 for the coming year. The request was approved.

DALY CITY MERCHANTS HOLD LIVELY SESSION

There was a lively meeting of the Daly City Merchants' Association held last Wednesday evening at the City Hall Auditorium. Not, indeed, on account of the large number of merchants, business and professional men present, but rather as a result of the personal interest felt by many of the members in such questions as "The Widening of Mission and San Jose Avenue," or "The assessment of property facing on Mission Street," or "The assessment of all the property in Daly City." These questions were informally discussed. Yes, so informally that at times there were as high as three or four talking at once, and no amount of pounding of the gavel by the president seemed to reach their ears. It was like a miniature Democratic national convention for disorder. But when the noise died down, and the meeting was over, and the minds of the combatants reached their normal and accustomed poise, it was easily to be seen that nothing had been accomplished, and every one seemed happy about it.

There will be a meeting of the property owners on Mission and San Jose avenue next Tuesday, July 12, at the City Hall in Daly City, at 8 P. M., for the purpose of discussing the proposed assessment. There will be many of the officials of San Francisco and San Mateo counties present at this meeting. Property owners on Mission street and San Jose avenue are the people principally interested.

Committees for the coming annual picnic were appointed, and everything will be in readiness for the greatest outing of the season. The picnic will be held at Oak Cove Park, near San Mateo, as usual, and is set for Sunday, September 4. Arrangements for transportation and traffic management and control will be announced later. Almost the whole of Daly City is expected to attend.

These meeting of the merchants are interesting and beneficial, and should be attended by all merchants, business and professional men.

W. H. CLAY, Recording Secretary.

RESIDENTS OF POLAND HONOR WASHINGTON

Poland, the country which gave to the American Revolution two heroes, Kosciuszko and Pulaski, is celebrating the two hundredth anniversary of George Washington's birth on a national scale, according to information received by the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission.

So important is this event considered in Poland that the Polish national holiday, May 3, was dedicated to the Bicentennial in Warsaw; streets in Warsaw and other cities have been named for George Washington, and the government has issued a commemorative postage stamp in honor of the occasion which features a portrait of George Washington flanked by likenesses of Kosciuszko and Pulaski.

An oak tree was planted and dedicated to George Washington in Paderewski Park in the Polish capital, and a street adjoining the park, expected to be one of Warsaw's most beautiful thoroughfares, was named George Washington Avenue in the ceremonies held on May 3.

The Bicentennial Celebration in Poland is under the direction of a central committee of which Dr. Ignace Moscicki, president of the Polish Republic, is the honorary head, and Joseph Pilsudski, First Marshal of the Polish army and hero of the World war, is an honorary member. The active chairman of the committee is Leopold Kotnowski, president of the Polish-American Society and the affiliated Polish-American Chamber of Commerce in Warsaw.

A concert ball given by the Polish-American Society in the Europe Hotel, Warsaw, officially opened the Bicentennial celebration in Poland. Attended by government, diplomatic, and military officials, and prominent Polish and American citizens, the function was an outstanding event.

A public meeting was also held in the town hall in Warsaw under the auspices of the central committee for the Bicentennial celebration in Poland, with Dr. Kotnowski presiding. Those in attendance included President Moscicki, Premier Alexander Pryspor, several ministers and vice-ministers, other government and municipal officials, and prominent citizens. The hall, seating more than a thousand, was filled to capacity.

The speakers on this occasion were Wladyslaw Raciewicz, speaker of the senate, Zygmunt Slomisnski, mayor of Warsaw, Professor Szymon Askenazy, and Joseph Flack, charge d'affaires of the United States Embassy. Following the program, Mr. Flack held a reception at the United States Embassy which was well attended by officials and prominent citizens.

At Gdynia, church services were devoted to the memory of George Washington. There was a military parade and a meeting held in the State Commissary building. Adam Bederski, state commissary, addressed the assemblage on the life of Washington. The principal street of the city was renamed George Washington street, and the ceremonies were concluded by the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner" by the pupils of the state public school.

A pamphlet entitled "George Washington" has been published by the central committee for the Bicentennial celebration in Poland, and 25,000 copies already have been printed. The pamphlet is being widely distributed, especially among the school children.

The programs and celebrations are being carried out and financed by the Polish people themselves. The United States government has not spent one cent on the Bicentennial celebration in any country abroad. The United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission has been offically informed that other ceremonies will be held throughout the year.

California Leads in Back To Good Times Movement

California can lead the nation back to good times. This is the thought expressed by Joseph M. Schenck, president of the United Artists, and A. G. Arnoll, secretary and general manager of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, in messages addressed this week to A. P. Giannini, chairman of the board of Bank of America.

"Unied Artists Studio is again in production after being closed for five months," Schenck wrote to Giannini. "We are putting men and women to work on a five day basis in order to give employment to the greatest number. A careful survey of conditions gives us a spirit of optimism as to the future."

Schenck said that United Artists have in production or are about to start production on pictures representing a total investment of $2,850,000. In Los Angeles, according to Arnoll, fifty new industries began construction operation during the past six months, investing $3,200,000. And forty others have expanded their facilities at a cost of $800,000.

Frank C. MacDonald, general president of the State Building Trades Council, is to be the next speaker on the weekly "Back to Good Times" program of the Bank of America, Saturday night at 7:15 over KGO and KFI. MacDonald has been an active figure in trade union work for the past twenty-five years and is a member of the unemployment committees appointed by Governor Rolph and Mayor Angelo Rossi.

Even a lightweight politician can sling a heavy chunk of mud.

Motorists to Aid Drive Against Forest Firebug

With organized motorists and other groups lending active assistance, formation of a statewide special committee to combat the menace of incendiarism during the period of forest fire danger this year is being perfected under the direction of the Stop Forest Fires Committee of California. E. B. DeGolia, president of the California State Automobile Association, is chairman of the special incendiary committee, which is to include key members in counties and communities affected by the forest fire problem.

The purpose of the committee is to bring about stricter enforcement of the fire laws and to arouse public sentiment in support of adequate punishment for those convicted of deliberately setting fire to forest or field areas. The efforts of the committee are intended to supplement and strenghten the general fire prevention activities of Federal and State authorities and various other organizations represented on the Stop Forest Fires Committee.

Interest in the campaign against incendiarism is being aroused through chambers of commerce, service clubs, sportsmen's organizations, granges, farm bureaus, women's clubs, boys' and girls' organizations, and the cooperation of the press.

Reasons for general support on the part of the general public are cited in a statement by DeGolia as follows:

Possible loss of human life and loss of property.

Loss of tourists trade by regions where forest fires are of frequent occurrence.

Loss of timber and watershed cover and deterioration of ranges.

Loss of federal, state and county tax money, spent in fighting fires, which would otherwise be available for county roads, schools, and other purposes.

Loss of game animals, birds and fish destroyed by fire.

Railway Crossing Signals Subject of Safety Effort

"Wait When Wig-Wags Warn."

With this phrase adopted as a slogan, a statewide campaign is being conducted this month by the California committee on public safety to instill in motorists a more careful regard for warning signals at railroad crossings. The subject was chosen as a timely one in view of the increased volume of vacation travel and the fact that large numbers of motorists are traveling routes presenting new and unfamiliar conditions. A statement of the committee announcing the campaign declares that strict observance of wig-wags and other rail crossing warning devices is necessary if grade crossing accidents and their toll of deaths and injuries are to be reduced. It is also pointed out that railways and interurban lines are running on vacation schedules in many instances, resulting in the more frequent passage of trains.

Educational and other efforts will be carried on throughout the month with the object of impressing the motorists with the necessity for careful driving and alertness in traversing railroad crossings.

The legal department of the California State Automobile Association, which is co-operating with the committee in futhering the success of the campaign, cites the fact that motorists are required by law to obey railroad warning signals. The motorists' organization quotes the following section of the California Vehicle Act:

"Whenever any person driving a vehicle approaches a highway and interurban electric or steam railway grade crossing and a human flagman or a clearly visible electrical or mechanical signal gives warning of the immediate approach of a railway train or car, it shall be unlawful for the driver of the vehicle to fail to bring the vehicle to a complete stop within fifty feet, but not less than ten feet, of the nearest railway tracks before traversing such grade crossing. It shall be unlawful for the driver of a vehicle to traverse a grade crossing when a human flagman gives or continues to give a signal of the approach or passage of a railway train or car."

EVERYTHING'S FUN! SAYS JACKIE COOPER

The biggest asset a boy can have is the ability to make fun out of any old thing he tackles, whether it's work or play.

That's the philosophy of Jackie Cooper, the eight-year-old movie star, In a message to children which appears in Child Life magazine this month, Jackie tells how he has fun:

"Its well to be able to have fun," he writes. "Whenever I work in a picture I have fun doing it, and when I get letters from other kids, saying they have fun seeing the pictures, it's like we were all sort of playing a game together. I guess I have some fun in almost everything I do, even some of my school work.

"I see the men on the set get fun out of what they're doing when they're working, too, so I guess work is only another kind of play if you look at it that way. I guess fellows that do that get a bigger kick out of everything, anyway."

It is said that more people go crazy in June. And more get married.

Bank of American Gains Over $51,600,000 Deposits

An increase of $51,600,000 in deposits, with 130,000 new depositors added since the return of Bank of America to California management and control, is reported by the bank in a combined statement of condition published today. Deposits are shown to have increased $710,903,000 from $659,222,000 on March 12, at which time the business building campaign was inaugurated.

Earnings of more than $2,800,000 were realized for the period ending June 30, of which 1,120,000 was utilized for depreciation on bank premises and fixtures. Undivided profits were increased to $6,259,048.69 during this period and reserves for losses and contingencies brought to $11,183,467 by a transfer of $10,000,000 from surplus account.

It is stated that the full benefit of increased deposits and economies in operations effected by the present management since March, should be reflected to an even greater extent in the earnings of the bank for the last half of the year, which is normally a period of substantial increase in deposits and earnings.

"These satisfactory constructive accomplishments have been made possible through the interested, united and loyal support and co-operation of our entire organization, stockholders and friends. The economies have been effected in a manner calculated not to aggravate the existing distressing unemployment situation, but at the same time to accomplish necessary savings in the interest of our stockholders," said A. P. Giannini, chairman of the board of directors, in commenting on the progress of the bank since the recent proxy contest.

"We have pursued the policy of conducting the bank's affairs in a normal, sane manner, and have without exception cared for all legitimate credit requirements of our clients. We have especially encouraged the building of small homes by making installment loans for new construction.

"It has been our old established policy to invest a very substantial portion of our savings deposits in installment first mortgage loans on improved California real estate. The wisdom of this policy has been clearly demonstrated through the depression by the fact that the shrinkage in this type of investment has been less than in any other type of security with the exception of United States government bonds, another of our major investments."

National Legion Conclave News to be Broadcasted

Originating in Portland, an American Legion program will be broadcast through KPO, San Francisco, and KECA, Los Angeles, every Tuesday evening between the hours of 10:30 P. M. and 11 P. M., from now until September, it is announced by James K. Fisk, State Adjutant of the Legion. The official news concerning the Legion's national convention to be held in Portland September 12 to 15, will be sent out over the air.

Musical and dramatic numbers woven around themes near to the hearts of veterans will be featured on each broadcast, and a forty-five piece military band will render patriotic and popular airs.

CARELESS BACKING CAUSE OF ACCIDENTS

Careless backing of cars is responsible for fourteen out of every thousand motor vehicle fatalities and seventeen out of every thousand injuries, according to nationwide reports received by the California State Automobile Association. A statement by the Public Safety Department of the motorists' organization on the subject of backing makes the following suggestions:

When a motorist starts or backs out of his garage too rapidly or with a sudden lurch, a serious accident may result.

In backing out of a garage the mere sounding of the horn is not sufficient to assure safety. The driver should move his car cautiously and watch to see that no one is standing or walking near the rear of the car.

Back slowly and carefully. This is necessary not only as a protection to pedestrians who may be passing, but also to avoid a possible collision with another car.

CALIFORNIA NEWS REVIEW

The San Francisco mint will coin $200,000 in quarters, in honor of the Washington bicentennial. This was revealed recently by Lemuel C. Hopkins, Treasury Department official.

The "Marsh Stone House," pioneer landmark near Byron, stands dedicated to the late Dr. John Marsh, who became California's first physician in 1836, although lacking a medical degree.

The seventy-eight patrolmen and executives of the Los Angeles County traffic department have been accepted as members of the California highway patrol, E. Raymond Cato, chief, announced. Cato said the Los Angeles unit would be accepted into the state organization as full fledged officers, with complete civil service rights. "The inclusion of the Los Angeles squad in the state patrol may be regarded as a step forward in promotion of uniform traffic control," said Cato.

A movement designed to bring about the immediate start of constructing the $38,500,000 all-American canal, auxiliary Boulder Dam project, has been inaugurated by the Associated Chambers of Commerce of the Imperial Valley. The canal, authorized by vote of the electorate of the Imperial Irrigation District on February 11, will double the present irrigation acreage of the district to nearly 1,000,000 acres and also extend the Colorado River water to the Coachella Valley. The river water will be extended under contract entered into between the Imperial Valley and the Federal Reclamation Bureau.

The sixty-fifth California Farmers' Convention will be held at Ventura next December 7, 8 and 9, it is announced by Dudley Moulton, director of the State Department of Agriculture. The decision to hold the 1932 State-wide gathering of farmers and fruit-growers there was made by Mr. Moulton, after he had received invitations from civic organizations and officials in every section of Ventura county. Ventura's bid also received support in adjacent counties. The marketing of citrus fruits will be one of the major topics of discussion at the convention, it is understood. Mr. Moulton announced that he will call together an advisory group of growers to assist in planning for the convention program.

Governor Rolph, at the request of Assemblyman J. E. Frazier, has named a committee to organize the rice industry for co-operation of all elements. The delegation which Frazier headed outlined a plan that contemplates the exportation of surplus rice of the state in foreign markets and the sale of the balance of the crop in the domestic market. This, it was said, will secure California rice growers the benefit of the tariff that is imposed on the importation of rice into the United States and particularly the Philippine Islands. Charles Elsey, president of the Western Pacific; J. E. Sullivan, president of the State Bankers' Association, and Norton Ware of the Sutter-Butte Canal Company form the committee.

Adopting a new program of preventive measures to cut down rapid increases in the ranks of state wards, superintendents of thirteen state institutions concluded a three-day conference at Sacramento recently. Correlation of three social service functions of the State Department of Institutions reaching the insane, feebleminded and juvenile delinquents, will be included in the relief program, Dr. J. M. Toner, director, announced. Under this plan, field workers will supervise many patients in their own homes and also provide facilities to permit the removal of certain types of hospital patients to their homes for supervised after care. This will eventually reduce the state's present population of 21,000 wards and result in economy, Dr. Toner announced.

England has increased its demand for California barley for brewing purposes each year since 1914 according to an agent of the United States Department of Agriculture who has spent a year in the United Kingdom for the purpose of studying barley conditions there. The high quality demanded by English malsters is met, says M. A. Lindsay, county farm adviser, by Kern county growers who are producing the Atlas barley marketed through Bakersfield. The tax on beer in England has been raised from about $1.90 per barrel in 1914 to $25 in 1930. As the tax is based on alcohol content, the breweries have been putting out a weak beer which does not keep well. California barley, it is said, imparts a keeping quality to the beverage not secured from the grain grown in any other country with the single exception of Chile, according to Mr. Lindsay.

Delegations from Nevada and Sierra counties were promised by the State Highway Commission $8000 to continue the work on the Nevada City and Downieville highway. The $100,000 that had been apportioned for the road has been used and with no more funds in sight the highway commission was asked to make an emergency appropriation.

William E. Conley of Los Angeles was elected national commander of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, at a recent convention at San Diego

The Sunnyvale air station will be the most complete in existence and much better than Lakehurst, according to the pronouncement recently of Rear Admiral A. L. Parsons (C. E. C.), U. S. N., chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks in Washington, D. C. The Admiral spent an entire day inspecting the construction work at the base in company with Lieutenant Commander Edwin L. Marshall, in charge of construction.

District Attorney Neil R. McAllister of Sacramento county was elected president of the State District Attorneys' Association at the recent annual convention held at Lake Tahoe. McAllister will succeed District Attorney Earl Warren of Alameda county in the presidency. Warren was elected secretary-treasurer of the association. Henry Lyon, district attorney of El Dorado county, was elected vice president. The 1933 convention will be in Santa Barbara.

The diversion of surplus food supplies to the relief of the unemployed and destitute, through the activities of a food products industries council working in conjunction with relief agencies was suggested by T. C. Tucker, a member of the State Board of Agriculture. Tucker, in a letter to Dudley Moulton of the State Department of Agriculture at Sacramento, declared that "deliberate destruction of foodstuffs was a social crime during these times of widespread distress." Tucker suggested that the diversions consist of off-grade qualities which tend to break the market but which have first rate food value. Tucker's plan is to have the State Department of Agriculture and its division of markets inaugurate the movement by the formation of a council "representing all factors in the various food product industries and working in conjunction with all agencies interested in relief work."

At the request of the lettuce growers in the state, the United States standards for lettuce have been revised, the State Department of Agriculture announced recently. California last year supplied the country with 35,630 cars of lettuce or practically 75 per cent of the country's supply. Lettuce shipped under the United States standards, certified by federal-state inspection, which is voluntary, has a better marketing value. Buyers and receivers of lettuce have for several years been demanding closer trimming of the vegetable. This has been recognized by the reduction of the total wrapper leaves permitted on heads of United States No. 1 lettuce from twelve to ten, with the further restriction that not more than six of these may be large and coarse. The department stressed that proper sizing and packing of lettuce are essential in its satisfactory preparation for the market and important in determining its value. The new standards provide for these factors.

Adequate protection for the public and employes was advocated at Sacramento recently by members of the legislative civil service investigating committee, Governor Rolph, the Civil Service Commission and other state officials. Members of the legislative committee expressed their views on what they thought the state civil service system should be. These points included credits for years of service, so incumbent employes will have an advantage over newcomers; sensible examinations; fair and adequate efficiency check on employes; determination of policy regarding temporary appointments, and protection to the taxpayers against inefficiency. Speakers at the meeting included Governor Rolph, Assemblymen Charles F. Reindollar, chairman, of San Rafael; George M. Biggar of Covelo; Melvyn I. Cronin of San Francisco, and Senators Walter H. Duval of Santa Paula, Ray R. Ingels of Ukiah and Thomas A. Maloney of San Francisco, members of the legislative committee. The committee is to report its findings to the 1933 Legislature.

State approval of a program for the salvaging of aged persons from the scrap heap of mental and physical deterioration was sought by Dr. Lillien J. Martin, 70-year-old consulting psychologist. "The aim of this work," said Mrs. Martin, "is to prevent the unnecessary depression found in the old by having been pushed out of life. We want to counteract the belief that the worker is ready for the scrap heap at 40 or 50 years of age. It is our desire to develop in the old the belief that they have much to contribute to the welfare of the community for their own salvation and the welfare of the whole." "The board feels that it will be impossible in this program, which, without examination, appears to be a most worthy one," said Mrs. Rheba Crawford Splivalo, director of social welfare. "With the increase in aid cases and appeals resulting from economic conditions, the department is badly handicapped in its own work by its budget limitations. Therefore active cooperation or financial aid for any outside cause could not possibly be granted." Mrs. Martin's program includes educational work, preventive work and therapeutic work among the aged.

Pleas for financial assistance for the construction of a $153,400,000 flood control and water conservation project on the San Joaquin, Sacramento and Kern rivers were made before the Board of Engineers on Rivers and Harbors at Washington recently, by a delegation of Californians. The delegation, headed by Senator Samuel M. Shortridge and accompanied by several representatives of the Golden State, seeks to have the United States increase the proposed appropriation of $11,370,000 as its share of the development.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

AN EXCITING MINUTE

HE LONGEST lives whose wits work fast,
Nor stop until the danger's past.

Everyone of the Little People on the Green Meadows, in the Green Forest, and around the Smiling Pool knows that this is true. It is those with the quickest wits who have the longest lives. Almost every day everyone of them has to depend on his wits to get him out of danger, unexpected danger. There isn't time for thinking. He must act first and do this thinking later. Such times may come to you and to me, but they are not likely to come often. We go days and days and days without meeting any real danger. But with the Little People it is different. Right when they think themselves safest they are likely to have to use their wits and to use them quickly to save their lives. That is one reason why we should do all we can to help them and protect them and never give them reason to fear us.

Now it didn't seem possible that there was the least bit of danger for anyone, as Buster Bear swam about in the pond of Paddy the Beaver that hot summer afternoon. It was as quiet and peaceful there as a place could possibly be. Then along came a mischievous Little Breeze and carried the smell of Farmer Brown's Boy to Buster Bear swimming out there in the pond. That doesn't seem like much for Farmer Brown's Boy couldn't possibly have hurt Buster Bear if he had wanted to, and he didn't want to do anything of the kind. But when Buster Bear was a very little cub he was taught that man is not to be trusted and is a creature to be feared, the only one, in fact, to be afraid of. Buster never had got over that fear.

Buster Bear Was Splashing Through the Rushes on the Other Side of the Pond and the Air Was Filled With Ducks.

So the instant Buster caught the faint smell of Farmer Brown's Boy, his wits said: "Get away from here as quickly as you can! This is no place for you! That is the dreadful man-smell. Get ashore at the nearest place and run!"

Buster didn't stop to think. He turned and made for the shore right where Paddy the Beaver and the Quack family were hiding among the rushes. Now they knew perfectly well that Buster Bear wasn't coming on purpose to hurt them. They knew he didn't know that they were there. But that wouldn't help any if one of his big feet landed on one of them. Buster Bear was frightened, and now they in their turn were frightened. Buster's fright was needless and foolish, but theirs was not. You see, they knew by the way he was coming that he wasn't going to be polite and ask them to get out of his way. No sir, Buster was too frightened to be polite; he was in too much of a hurry.

The wits of Paddy the Beaver worked quickly. They always do. He didn't have to stop to think to dive. He just dived without any thinking, and by the time he could do any thinking he was safely out of the way of Buster Bear. At the first splash Buster made as he headed for the shore, the Quack family started to swim out of the way. But Buster Bear was coming too fast for them to get out of his way in that manner. Mr. Quack's wits just opened his wings and sent him up into the air like a rocket. He didn't stop to think to fly; he simply flew. Mrs. Quack did the same thing, and the ten young Quacks, now almost as big as their parents, like dutiful children, followed.

It all happened in just a little minute, it seemed to Farmer Brown's Boy. One minute everything was as quiet and peaceful as could be, and the next Buster Bear was splashing through the rushes on the other side of the pond and the air was filled with ducks flying in all directions and quacking with fright. It was a very exciting minute and just to add to the excitement, Farmer Brown's Boy stood up and yelled. That yell seemed to double Buster Bear's speed. The mud and water flew as he dashed through the rushes to the shore and disappeared in the Green Forest, running as if he never would stop. In no time he was quite out of sight, but Farmer Brown's Boy could still hear him crashing his way through the Green Forest. Then once more everything became quiet and peaceful. Farmer Brown's Boy washed the mud from his face and neck. Then he hid and waited patiently. Presently Mr. Quack came on whistling wings and flew twice around the pond. Seeing no one, he dropped down on the water with a splash and then quacked loudly. At once Mrs. Quack and the young Quacks appeared, and soon they were busy talking it all over.

LIFE IS A FIRE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

LIFE is a fire, and memory the embers,
If it be joy or pain that one remembers,
A little while the fire flames and flashes;
It shall be long before it all is ashes.
We would not care if care would soon be over;
Alas, the world has many a weary rover
Within whose heart, if going or returning,
Some ancient hurt keeps on forever burning.

Yet love was ours, and home, and happy faces,
Yes, joy was ours in other times and places.
Love quickly flames, and nothing flames so brightly,
Or fades so soon, if love has loved too lightly.
We can't forget that some old vow was broken—
Let us recall at least the vow was spoken.
The hand of time in time the hurt would soften—
Perhaps we stir the fires of hate too often.

Life is a fire, and memory the embers,
If it be joy or pain that one remembers.
If it be pain, then leave the past to perish,
If it be joy, rekindle and recherish.
Life is a fire, and mortals must rebuild it,
Not with the pain but with the joy that filled it.
The coals of hate are not the coals for blowing,
But keep your hope, your faith, forever glowing.

Detroit's Depression Restaurant

THE Penny Pantry of Detroit, a philanthropic restaurant venture where a full meal is served for ten cents or less, is proving its popularity by serving thousands every day. Except for a few meat items, which are two cents, everything on the menu, which includes bread, vegetables, coffee, etc., sells for one cent. Backers of the venture, refusing to divulge their names, say the enterprise is entirely non-profit taking. They want to feed the needy without attaching the stigma of charity.

SOME DINNER DISHES

THESE recipes have been gathered from various sources; some will like to try them as they are not common:

Salmon With Sauce Piquant.

Take three-qarter-inch-slices of salmon, place in a saucepan with hot fish broth, adding a touch of fruit juice or vinegar. Simmer fifteen minutes. Remove from the broth, wipe dry, place on a hot platter and serve with the sauce prepared as follows: Melt a quantity of butter, flavor to taste with tarragon vinegar, pepper, mustard, fennel and any spices liked. Stir over the heat until cooked, move to the back of the range and add the yolk of an egg to thicken. Serve at once.

Bisque of Herbs.

Chop together a handful of lettuce, sorrel, spinach, a small onion, a little celery and and chervil and cook with two tablespoonfuls of butter until soft, stirring constantly. Add three tablespoonfuls of flour with four cupfuls of cauliflower water; add a beaten egg and serve with croutons.

Fresh Perch.

Prepare six fresh perch and marinate them in two tablespoonfuls of olive oil, a sprig of parsley, a little pepper and salt, all-spice, bayleaf and other spices. Keep the fish in the marinade for an hour. Remove, roll in crumbs which have been seasoned with spices and cook until a golden brown. Serve with a butter sauce.

Stuffed Egg Plant.

Cut egg plant into halves lengthwise, remove the inside and make of this a stuffing by chopping fine and adding chopped parsley and onions. Stuff the egg plant with the mixture and place in a casserole with plenty of melted butter. Simmer over a slow fire until all is well cooked. Cover the top with bread crumbs, add a little melted butter and keep hot until served.

PRACTICAL EDUCATION

An intelligent contribution to the current discussion regarding what is desirable in the way of present-day education was made by Dr. John J. Tigert, president of the University of Florida, who declared that the true purpose of education is to fit the citizen to serve as well as to live.

He draws attention to two schools of current thought, one of which would stress cultural education, while the other would place chief emphasis upon vocational training. He admits the validity of both, but he would not go to the extremes sought by the advocates of either. He favors a balanced program of education, with sufficient flexibility to meet the needs of each individual.

While not minimizing the value of cultural studies and their absolute necessity for those who would enter the learned professions, Dr. Tigert points out that "one can not live by culture alone; this is especially true of the great mass of our citizens who must engage in pursuits which involve the use of their hands."

It seems to be the general belief that practical education should be planned in accordance with the needs of the individual in preparation for his life's work. At present too much time is given to preparing for college entrance examinations which only a small percentage of public pupils will ever have the opportunity to take, it is claimed. The needs of those who must quit school at the end of grammar or high school courses should have more consideration.

AN ABLE AND BUSY J. P.

All over the land many able and energetic officials perform valuable services which receive little public attention or acclaim. Recently a feature writer discovered one of these and gave him a deserved write-up. The official is W. H. Knight, justice of the peace at Piggott, Arkansas, who has held his present office since 1923.

During his nine years' service he has attained an unusual reputation as a marrying justice, having united no less than 2,001 couples for better or worse. By a rather remarkable coincidence, he had also heard 2,001 law cases at the time the article referred to was written.

As a testimonial to Knight's legal knowledge, it is stated that of the 2,001 cases tried before him, only sixty-nine were appealed, and only three of his judgments were reversed by the higher courts. Out of 166 persons he had bound over to grand juries, 162 were indicted.

This is what might be called a pretty high "batting average," and constitutes a record of which any jurist might be proud.

A REAL PHILANTHROPIST

So many sordid stories have come out of Chicago in recent years, that it is refreshing to hear something different from that great and much maligned city. Therefore, we are glad to tell of the fine philanthropy of William D. Turner, who provided 97,411 meals for the poor children of Chicago during the past year.

According to a writer in Grit, Mr. Turner is a millionaire who denies himself the luxures of life in order that he may give its necessaries to the unfortunate. He is a bachelor, 78 years old, who "wears inexpensive, old-fashioned clothes, rides in a 1924 model automobile, and takes a day coach when he travels to his winter home in Foley, Alabama, instead of a Pulman."

Last winter someone told him of the plight of thousands of hungry children in the elementary schools of the city, and he determined to do something about it. As a result a plan was worked out whereby many schools have operated free lunch rooms, as many as 3,982 meals having been served in a month at a single school.

Asked about his philanthropy, Mr. Turner recently said that really C. Edgar Thompson, a banker, was handling the whole thing. "I'm not doing anything except furnish the money," said Turner.

And that, we may say, is doing quite a bit.

A temperance society warns its members not to drink cider more than twenty-four hours old. Some moonshiners, too, make their stuff fresh every morning.

Simplified practices are being adopted by restaurants, according to the Department of Commerce. But boarding house hash has lost none of its complexity.

A philanthropist proposed to rehabilitate his native town of Pugwash, Nova Scotia. A new name would be an inexpensive improvement.

Nations would need fewer arms if statesmen would keep their heads.

We suspect it was an ugly rumor that staged the first non-stop flight.

A QUESTION OF POLICY

The establishment in Chile of the first socialistic republic in the western hemisphere, through the overthrow of President Montero on June 4, may have a marked influence upon the policy of the United States with respect to Latin-America.

This country has investments in Chile amounting to more than 815 million dollars. The Cosach nitrate combine alone, controlled by American capital, is worth 375 millions, while Chilean bonds floated in the United States reach the sum of 275 mililons. It is said that extremist leaders in Chile advocate the confiscation of foreign capital, and also demand the repudiation of foreign debts.

Important as the new Chilean attitude is, the real menace is the propagation of this attitude in the rest of Latin-America, where the success of the Chilean radical movement may encourage communistic tendencies in other countries to the southward.

Not long ago the Martinez government of El Salvador put down a communistic revolt, and although that government has not been recognized by the United States, because of rather technical objections to the manner in which Martinez came in to power, it seems to have much to commend it on practical grounds. As a writer in the Washington Star recently said:

"Under the present circumstances, perhaps the State Department should reconsider its earlier decision not to recognize the Martinez regime in El Salvador, which had been set up with the aid of armed forces. Recognition by the United States, and the moral support which this entails, might be a guaranty against the repetition of the Chilean crisis in El Salvador."

Martinez seems favorable to American interests; he is doing his best to maintain law and order, and to protect foreign lives and property. He appears to be deserving of the support which American recognition would give him.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.

Community advertising addresses itself to the tourist, homeseeker, investor, manufacturer, and farmer.

Most everybody believes in respect being shown for old age. The sentiment is right and a useful one, although mainly to the extent that the younger party recognizes the fortitude of the older party in adding what he has to the foundations of wisdom and knowledge and to the extent that the respect rendered is also a recognition of the inevitability with which the youth of one day is the old age of tomorrow.

Quite surprising how daylight sports and events can be held at night nowadays by the aid of searchlights, floodlights and spotlights being set at various parts of the ground, making the field so clear that every unit taking part is distinctly seen.

You should never lose an opportunity to let the outside world know the good things about your city.

Some contend that when times are bad every opportunity should be taken to cease work, cut down wages, discharge men and stop production, and through such efforts bring back better times. This, they think is economy. While others maintain that in order to bring back normal times we must redouble every energy in every direction toward getting better markets and more money in circulation.

Spasmodic advertising does not bring the results that can be obtained by continuous advertising.

Telephones are nearly as necessary to a business as advertising. The use of a telephone can help to build business, as well as to destroy it. When complaints are made over the telephone, courteous answers will smooth out many misunderstandings, while discourteous answers can lose more business than can be regained in many a day.

It is said that a lot of cities would progress faster if a number of their citizens would take a ship and, when in mid-ocean, jump overboard.

By advertising, the desire to possess is created in the minds of those who have the money to buy.

THE OIL PROBLEM

The plight in which the oil industry finds itself, after several years of earnest effort to prevent overproduction and to eliminate waste, is due to the unscientific theory of oil rights which have obtained since the inception of commercial oil production, it is claimed.

Briefly, this theory has been that anyone who saw fit to drill an oil well was entitled to whatever oil he might find under the surface of his land. As oil is formed in pools underground, if one land owner found oil under his land, the adjoining owners were compelled to drill competing wells in order to protect their interests in the pool which often lay beneath the property of many contiguous owners.

This theory and system has resulted in the unnecessary drilling of innumerable wells at great expense, when a lesser number might have recovered the oil deposits more economically, with consequent benefits to the industry and to the public at large.

Recently there has been suggested a more scientific and practical "unit plan," whereby owners of oil lands in a given area might agree to pool their interests and prorate the profits from production in that area, regardless of who happened to own the exact surface rights to the location of a producing well.

For example: Before a test well is drilled it is proposed that owners of a block of adjoining land should agree that the oil found under the whole tract would be considered the property of all land owners in the tract, according to the acreage owned by each. Then, if oil should be found the pool could be developed in an orderly manner, without the frantic scramble for production which now results whenever a new pool is discovered.

If such a plan had been adopted when commercial production of oil was begun, many thousands of wells since drilled could have been eliminated, while the total production would have been only slightly reduced. This would have meant an enormous saving to producers, and a consequent saving to consumers.

The "unit plan" is supported by every consideration of economy and common sense. It should be universally adopted by the oil industry, not only in its own interest, but in the interest of oil conservation and for the benefit of the public.

SIDELIGHTS

It is thought by many that repeated and ruthless grilling by police caused the suicide of Miss Violet Sharpe, waitress in the home of Mrs. Morroy, grandmother of the slain Lindberg baby, alhtough Mrs. Morrow and all the family had already convinced themselves of the girl's innocence of any connection with the crime. Thus another tragic episode is added to that deplorable drama of crime and stupidity.

Another argument for college training: Lou Gehrig of the New York Yankees, a graduate of Columbia University, knocked four home runs in a single game the other day, tying the all time record for homers in a single major league game.

A year and a half ago, when Fox movie shares were selling at $30, J. W. Pope of the New York Stock Exchange was tried on charges of "knocking" this stock and saying it was selling too high. Pope proved his statements and was acquitted. He has since died. Last week he was further vindicated by the sale of Fox shares at $1.25.

Twenty years ago Calbraith Rodgers made the first trans-continental airplane flight from New York to California in 49 days, making many stops on the way. The present record, held by Major James Doolittle, is 11 hours, 16 minutes. As the eminent Mr. Brisbane would say: "That's progress."

Even if few modern homes are being built just now, a lot of people are thinking of them and keeping an eye on new developements. Recently 6,000 visitors viewed a model all electric home, built by realty men in New York, on the first day it was thrown open for public inspection.

A number of authors and educators recently made up lists of everworked words. We nominate for inclusion in such a list the words "colorful' and "glamorous." Colorful politicians and glamorous movie actresses, especially, are becoming entirely too common.

What must have been close to a record for brevity in a Senate speech was made by Senator Hattie Caraway of Arkansas in her first participation in debate a few days ago. She used only 23 words to voice her disapproval of the Farm Board.

O. O. McIntyre tells this one: A stenographer in a big New York office was missing and a search failed to find her. Finally a bright office boy inquired: "Has anyone thought of looking on the boss's knee?"

A golf club in the hands of W. C. Moore, an attorney of Dillon, N. C., acted somewhat like a boomerang a few days ago. Saying to a companion, "Just watch me wham this one," wham it he did, and the club in some manner rebounded to fracture the whammer's jaw.

Regardless of the evidence, we doubt that Judge Seabury will convince a majority of the New Yorkers that Mayor Jimmy Walker is crooked—or that they would get very mad about it if he did. A mayoralty race between the Judge and Jimmy next time would be interesting.

A 72-year-old carpenter of Windsor, Canada, did two chores in one visit to a government office recently. He registered the birth of a newly born son and applied for an old age pension at the same time.

Abandonment of the San Francisco airport was proposed by Adolph Uhl in a letter received by Mayor Rossi. Uhl advised cuts in various departments in addition to the abandonment of the airport, to reduce the San Francisco tax rate 16 cents.

Tom Parkinson of Waynesburg, Pa., used his head most effectively the other day, although he was unconscious at the time. Overcome by carbon monoxide gas in his father's garage while at the wheel of the family car, his head fell forward on the button which operates the horn, and its continued blast brought help in time to save his life.

A nephew will inherit the state, valued in excess of $10,000, of Magherito Broggi, late Menlo Park resident, according to the will filed in Superior court. The nephew is Clodomiro Generelli, of Menlo Park.

A writer remarks that John J. McGraw found the New York Giants in the celler 30 years ago and left them there when he resigned as manager recently. But in the meantime he had won 10 pennants and three world championships, so while his baseball career did not exactly end in a blaze of glory he made a record which will be remembered for many a day.

★ MORE THAN 210,000 CALIFORNIA WOMEN SAY....

Electric Cooking is Economical...Scientifically Certain

When science turned to electricity as a means of lessening the labors of women in their household duties its greatest contribution was the electric range. When accurate thermometer temperature devices under automatic time control were made a part of the electric range, cooking became truly Domestic Science.

No woman need make guesses today with her baking—no woman need be worried about failure when she cooks with an electric range. When she cooks electrically she cooks by accurate recipe temperatures and can depend upon the precision temperature control to take all guesswork out of her most "fussy" baking.

For whole meal preparation for meats, vegetables, and cooked desserts, the woman who cooks electrically can place them all in an oven during the morning hours, leave the house for the rest of the day and come home again to a complete dinner perfectly cooked. For while she is gone the clock will turn on the clean heat of glowing electric coils and the thermometer will control the cooking temperatures.

In more than 210,000 California homes women cook not by luck but by electric cooking science. Recipes become time-after-time successes, for electric cookery is as accurate as time itself and certain as science.

See these modern marvels of cookery at your dealer's store or in your local P. G. and E. office. Electric ranges are not costly to buy and are economical to operate. Right now a Special Electric Range Offer is in effect which includes easy purchase terms.

AN ENJOYABLE OUTING NEAR THE SEASHORE

Last Monday, Fourth of July, a small group of Daly City residents journeyed to Rockaway Beach, to enjoy an outing close to the seashore. The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Collins and little Jerry, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Heim and daughter Lorraine, Mr. and Mrs. Ray F. Brulez, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. McHugh and children, and Mrs. Collins' grandmother, who will soon celebrate her seventy-eighth birthday. The party was joined later by Mrs. K. Barzanno and daughter Mae, who spent the greater portion of the afternoon shooting firecrackers and likewise adding a certain amount of zest to the picnic, although disturbing the slumbers of the regular contingent of beach loungers.

A perfect consolidation was effected when the circle was enlarged by the presence of Mr. and Mrs. Jeff Martin and their two children Jerry and Kenneth, and Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell. Jeff related many tales of his past experiences, many of which occurred on the open range of New Mexico and Texas. To demonstrate that his prowess with the lariat was practical instead of theoretical, Jeff sombed the beach until he found a suitable piece of sea-weed of sufficient length, and proceeded to show the audience how he had roped many wild steers in the good old days, when a gun in your hand was worth two in the other fellows' holsters.

His deftness with the improvised rope held Ed Heim spellbound, who sat with mouth agape watching the ex-cowboy twirl the lariat. Mrs. Martin, who mentioned that she had witnessed such a performance on umerous occasions, called a halt to the exhibition and failing to receive an immediate response to her commands, pelted Jeff with all the available watermellon rinds until he was forced to seek shelter among the spectators. However, we liked Jeff very much, and it is rumored that he intends to teach Ed Heim a few tricks with the rope.

Our "Personality Man," with the smile you can't erase, was kept busy looking after the comfort of the party, passing out sandwiches and refreshments. When the hour became quite late, he produced a large pot of hot coffee, which was enjoyed immensely by the entire group.

"ROBINSON CRUSOE" COMING TO THE TIVOLI THEATRE

The Children's Theatre of San Francisco will present Daniel DeFoe's masterpiece of adventure, "Robinson Crusoe," at the Tivoli Theatre on Saturday afternoon and evening, July 30, and this will be the Pacific Coast premier of this famous classic.

Adapted in seven scenes and with an adult acting company of forty people, "Rbinson Crusoe" will be one of the most spectacular productions to be presented by the Children's Theatre. While this spectacular play abounds with comedy and sailor songs it also has several thrilling scenes, including a storm and shipwreck on the high seas, which is woven into the romance and adventures of Robinson Crusoe, up to the time that he is cast away upon the tropical island among the cannibals, where he meets and rescues a native boy who he names Friday. If you have enjoyed reading the book you will most assuredly be really thrilled at the play and these famous characters come to life on the stage. "Robinson Crusoe" is truly a play that you will remember for years as a pleasant memory.

SYNOPSIS

Gaynor, with a strange sort of smile King thought, half sheepish and the other half tender, cast a downward glance along the encasement of the outer man. Silk shirt, a very pure white; bright tie, very new; white flannels, very spick and span; silken hose and low white ties. This garb for Ben Gaynor the lumberman, who felt not entirely at his ease, hence the sheepish grin; a fond father decked out by his daughter as King well guessed; hence that gleam of tenderness.

"Gloria's doings," he chuckled. "I guess I'd wear a monkey jacket if she said so, Mark." But none the less his eyes, as they appraised the rough garb of his guest, were envious. "I can breathe better, just the same, in boots like yours," he concluded. He stretched his long arms high above his head. "I wish I could get out into the woods for a spell with you, Mark."

"The very thing," said King eagerly. "That's just what I want."

But Gaynor shook his head and his thin, aristocratic face was briefly overcast, and for an instant shadows crept into his eyes.

"No can do, Mark," he said quietly. "Not this time. I've got both hands full and then some."

King leaned forward in his chair, his hands gripping Gaynor's knee.

"Ben, it's there. I've always known it, always been willing to bet my last dollar. Now I'd gamble my life on it. I came up this time from Georgetown. You remember the old trail, up by Gerle's, Red cliff and Hell hole, leaving French meadows and Heaven's gate and Mount Mildred 'way off to the left. I had it all pretty much my own way until I came to Lookout ridge. And who do you suppose I found poking around there? Swen Brodie. And Andy Parker."

Gaynor frowned, impressed as King had been before him.

King went on. "He and Parker were up on the cliffs not a quarter-mile from the old cabin. They stood close together, right at the edge. Parker fell. Brodie looked down, turned on his heel and went off, smoking his stinking pipe, most likely. I buried Parker the next morning."

"Poor devil," said Gaynor. Then his brows shot up and he demanded:

"You mean Brodie did for him? Shoved him over?"

"That's exactly what I mean. I saw the whole thing from the mountain across the lake, too far to swear to anything like that. But this I can swear to: Brodie was in there for the same thing we've been after for ten years."

"How do you know what Brodie and Perker were after?"

"Andy Parker. He was sullen and tight-mouthed for the most part until delirium got him. Then he babbled by the hour. And all his talk was of Gus Ingle and the devil's luck of the unlucky Seven, with every now and then a word for Loony Honeycutt and Swen Brodie. Now I've told you my tale, let's have yours. You saw Honeycott; could you get anything out of him?"

"Only this, that you are dead right about his knowing or thinking that he knows. He is feebler than he was last fall, a great deal feebler both in body and mind. 'Oh, I know what you're after,' he cackles at me, shrewd enough to hit the nail square, too, Mark. 'And,' he rambles on, 'you've come to the right man. But am I goin' to blab now, havin' kept a shut mouth all these years?' And then he goes on to proclaim that he is feeling a whole lot stronger these days, that come midspring he'll be as frisky as a colt, and that then he means to have what is his own! And that is as close as he ever comes to sayin anything."

"He can't live a thousand years," mused King. "He is eighty now, if he's a day."

"Eighty-four by his own estimate."

"He knows something, Ben."

"So do we, or think we do. So does Brodie, it would seem. Does old Honeycutt know any more than the rest of us?"

"We are all young men compared with Loony Honeycutt, all Johnny-come-lately youngsters. Gus Ingle and his crowd, as near as we can figure, came to grief in the winter of 1853. By old Honeycutt's own count he would have been a wild young devil of seventeen then. And—"

"And," cut in Gaynor, "if you believe the murderous old rascal, he knows with sly, intimate knowledge how and why the man in the lone cabin was killed. All in that same winter of '53!"

King pricked up his ears.

"I didn't know that. What does he say?"

"He talks on most subjects pretty much at random. It makes a man shiver to stand there in the sunshine and hear him hinting broadly it was a boy seventeen who, carrying nothing but an ax, did for the poor devil in the cabin."

"And I, for one, believe him!" He began to pace up and down, frowning. "Brodie has been hanging around him lately, hasn't he?"

"Yes. Brodie and Steve Jarrold and Andy Parker and the rest of Brodie's worthless crowd of illicit booze-runners. They hang out in the old McQuarry shack, cheek by jowl with Honeycutt. Brodie, it seems, has even been cooking the old man's meals for him."

"There you are!" burst out King. "What more do you want? Imagine Swen Brodie turning over his hand for anybody on earth if there isn't something in it all for Swen Brodie."

"Well," demanded Gaynor, "what's to be done? With all his jabberings, Honeycutt is sly and furtive and is obsessed with the idea that there is one thing he won't tell."

"There's one thing we haven't tried. Old Honeycutt is as greedy a miser as ever gloated over a pile of hoardings. We'll get a thousand dollars—five thousand, if necessary—in hard

Hers Were the Softest, Tenderest Gray Eyes He Had Ever Looked Into.

gold coin, if we have to rob the mint for it. You'll spread it on the table in his kitchen. You'll let it chink and you'll let some of it drop and roll. If that won't buy the knowledge we want— But it will!"

"I've known the time when five thousand wasn't as much money as it is right now, Mark—"

"I've got it, if I scrape deep. And I'll dig down to the bottom."

"And if we draw a blank?"

But there was a step at the door, the knob was turning. Mark King turned, utterly unconscious of the quick stiffening of his body as he awaited the introduction to Ben's wife.

CHAPTER II

At first, King was taken aback by Mrs. Ben's youthfulness. Or look of youth, as he understood presently. She was a very pretty woman, petite, alert, and decidedly winsome. She chose to be very gracious to her husband's lifelong friend, giving him a small, plump hand in a welcoming grip, establishing him in an instant, by some sleight of femininity which King did not plumb, as a hearth-side intimate most affectionately regarded.

She slipped to a place on the arm of Gaynor's chair, her hand toying with her husband's graying hair.

"She loves old Ben," thought King. "That's right."

She adored Ben; you could see that. If she was not more at his side, the matter was simply explained; she adored their daughter Gloria no less, and probably somewhat more, and Gloria needed her. Any small misstep which she herself had made in life her daughter must be saved from making; all of her unsatisfied yearnings must be fulfilled for Gloria.

Ben Gaynor's eyes followed his wife pridefully when, at the end of fifteen pleasant, sunny minutes, she left them, and then went swiftly to his friend's face, seeking approbation. And he found it.

"Pretty tardy date to congratulate you, old man," King said with a laugh. "Don't believe I ever remembered it before, did I?"

Ben glowed and rubbed his long hands together in rich contentment.

"She's a wonder, Mark," he said heartily.

Mark nodded an emphatic approval. Words, which Ben perhaps looked for, he did not add. Everything had been said in the one word "congratulate."

From without came a gust of shouts and laughter from the Gaynor guests skylarking along the lake shore.

"Come," said Ben. "You'll have to meet the crowd, Mark. And I want you to see my little girl; I've told her so many yarns about you that she's dying of curiosity."

King followed his host. He would shake hands, say a dozen stupid words, and escape for a good long talk with Ben. Then, before the lunch hour, he would be off.

They came abreast of a wide stairway leading to the second story. Down the glistening threads, making her entrance like the heroine in a play, just at the proper instant, in answer to her cue, came Gloria.

"Gloria," called Gaynor. "Come here, my dear. Mark, this is my little girl. Gloria, you know all about this wild man. He is Mark King."

"Indeed, yes!" cried Gloria. She came smiling down the stairway, a fluffy pink puffball floating fairywise. Her two hands were out, ingenuously, pretty little pink-nailed hands which had done little in this world beyond adorn charmingly the extremities of two soft round arms. For an instant King felt the genial current within him frozen as he stiffened to meet the girl he had watched in the extravagant dance down to the lake.

Then, getting his first near view of her, his eyes widened. He had never seen anything just like her; with that he began, realizing dully that he was straying into strange pastures. He took her two hands because there was nothing else to do, feeling just a trifle awkward in the unaccustomed act. He looked down into Gloria's face, which was lifted so artlessly up to his. Hers were the softest, tenderest gray eyes he had ever looked into. From the beginning he thought of her in superlatives. And thus did Gloria, like the springtime coquetting with an aloof and silent wilderness, make her bright entry into Mark King's life.

"I have been acting-up like a Comanche Indian outside," laughed Gloria. It was she who withdrew her hands. "My hair was all tumbling down and I had to run upstairs to fight it back where it belongs. Isn't a girl's hair a terrible affliction, Mr. King? One of these days, when papa's back is turned, I'm going to cut it off short, like a boy's."

Gloria's eyes, despite their soft tenderness, were every whit as quick as Mark King's when they were, as now, intrigued. Of course both she and King had heard countless references, one of the other, from Ben Gaynor. King had known that there was a baby girl, long ago; he had known, had he ever paused for reflection, which he had not, that a baby would not stay such during a period of eighteen years. She had heard a thousand tales of "my good friend, Mark." Mark, thus, had been in her mind a man of her father's age, and about such a young girl's romantic ideas do not flock. But from the first glimpse of him she had sensed other things. King would have blushed had he known how picturesque he bulked in her eyes; how now, while she smiled at him so ingenuously, she was doing his thorough going masculinity full tribute; how the clear manlike look of his eyes and the warm dusky tan of face and hands—even the effect of the careless, worn boots and the muscular throat showing through an open shirt collar—put a delicious little shiver of excitement into her.

King, having agreed to stay to luncheon, was in the bathroom off Golden's room, shaving. Gloria had danced away, singing, to her abandoned friends, who were returning to the house. "It's the Mark King, my dears!" she told them triumphantly, not unconscious of the depressing result of her disclosures upon a couple of boys of the college age who adored openly and with frequent lapses from glorious hope to bleak despair.

They were all of Gloria's "set" with one noteworthy exception. Him she called "Mr. Gratton" while the others were Archie and Teddy and Georgia and Evelyn and Connie. It was to this "Mr. Gratton" that she turned, having made a piquant face at the dejected college youths.

"You will like him immensely, I know," she said.

"Mr. Gratton" smiled urbanely. For his own part he might have been called every inch a concrete expression of suavity. He was a shrewd-eyed man of thirty-five with ambitions, a chalky complexion, and a very weak mouth with full red lips.

"Miss Gloria," he whispered as he managed to have her all to himself a moment, "you'll make me jealous."

She was used to him saying stupid things. Yet she laughed and seemed pleased. Gratton egotistically supposed her thought was of him; King would have been amazed to know that she was already watching the house for his coming.

That afternoon King shook hands with Archie, Teddy, Gratton, and the rest, made his formal bows to Gloria's girl friends, and felt relief when the inept banalities languished and he was free to draw apart. Gratton, with slender finger to his shadowy mustache, bore down upon him. King did not like this suave individual.

"I have been tremendously interested," Gratton led off ingratiatingly, "in the things I have heard of you, Mr. King. By George, men like you live the real life."

The wild fancy came booming upon King to kick him over the veranda railing.

"Think so?" he said coolly, wondering despite himself what "things" Gratton had heard of him. He was sorry that he had promised to stay to lunch. His thoughts all of a sudden were restive, flying off to Swen Brodie, to Loony Honeycutt, to what he must get done without too much delay.

Gratton was nobody's fool, save his own, and both marked and resented King's attitude.

"What's the chance with Gus Ingle's 'Secret' this year, Mr. King?" he demanded silkily.

King wheeled on him.

"What do you know about it?" he said sharply. "And who has been talking to you?"

Gratton laughed, looked wise and amused, and strolled away.

* * * * * * *

"But, my darling daughter," gasped Mrs. Gaynor, "You don't in the least understand what you are about! What in the world was Mark King thinking of?"

The Fame of Bengal

What the Well-Dressed Lady Wears in Darjeeling.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)—WNU Service.

BENGAL province, India, fearing extinction of its rhinoceroses, due to wholesale shooting, has made killing or injuring of these animals illegal except in cases of self-defense.

Bengal, straddling the northernmost point of the Bay of Bengal, and stretching northward to the foothills of the Himalayas, owes much of its fame to an animal—the Bengal tiger which inhabits most large zoos.

The province is one of the most thickly inhabited areas of the world. It is nearly equal in area to the state of Kansas and as many people live within its borders as inhabit New York state, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Texas and Michigan. More than eighty different languages are spoken, not to mention the many dialects.

The narrow northern extremity of Bengal resembles that of Idaho. Like Idaho, the province spreads out as it stretches southward. But after leaving that extremity, no one could charge Idaho with having such deformity of shape, for the border line of Bengal zigzags in all directions.

Bengal's gateway is its most homely feature. The water that surrounds the coast is laden with silt, brought down from the north by the Ganges and a labyrinth of rivers and creeks that pierce the coast line. Waterlogged jungles, infested with tigers and other wild animals, lie between these channels. These wilds and the swampy lowlands immediately north of them are called the Sundarbans.

When the Ganges goes on its annual rampage and overflows its banks for 200 miles from its mouth, the Sundarbans are submerged. The less flooded area is planted in rice and it is an interesting sight to see "row boat farmers" tending their submarine crops. When the water subsides, it leaves a fertile layer of earth that causes jute, rice and wheat, and many other products to thrive in this region.

Nearly all Bengal is a flat, fertile plain from the Sundarbans to the foot of the Himalayas which is reached after a day and night of rough train riding. A narrow gauge railroad is then taken to reach Bengal's roof, Darjeeling. The snake-like course of the railroad passes thousands of acres of tea plants that, from a distance, resemble fields of boxwood hedge. Some of the plants grow six feet tall in Bengal, and are stripped of their leaves five times a year.

Calcutta, the capital of the province, is one of the most progressive cities of the East, with all the modern devices to handle its tremendous commerce and entertain its native and foreign population. In less than 250 years it has become the largest city in India and second only to London in the British empire.

To the traveler who approaches Calcutta by water, its growth is a mystery. At the mouth of the Hooghly, the indigo blue water of the Bay of Bengal turns to a dirty brown. For much of the 80-mile trip mud flats and water-logged forests form the river-side scenery with no evidence of civilization save for the commercial craft plying the river. Only the most skilled pilot can steer a vessel up the shifty channel.

When almost within sight of Calcutta, the smoke stack of a jute mill and here and there groups of native-thatched huts break the monotony of the journey and then, rounding a bend, the great Indian port appears.

Hindus at the Bath.

Bathing ghats on both banks now are filled with Hindus. One of the popular ghats is at the botanical gardens, where grows the famous Calcutta banyan tree. It covers nearly two acres and has about 250 trunks. A short distance beyond, perspiring natives loading and unloading ocean-going vessels solve the secret of Calcutta's development—commerce. Small boats resembling the Chinese sampans clustered about the wharves or floating leisurely to and from Howrah, Calcutta's manufacturing district on the other side of the Hooghly, handle much of the local small freight.

Like most large cities, Calcutta has its slums with squalid houses of mud and thatch, and sometimes brick, bordering narrow, dirty streets and inhabited by half-starved, unkempt natives.

Dalhousie square, a few blocks from the Hooghly is an attractive parkway. The post office, which faces its lake bears a tablet designating the vicinity of the famous Calcutta Black Hole episode.

The Maidan, Calcutta's "Mall," with its race track, cricket fields and gardens, is the rendezvous for sport lovers and promenaders. In the evening the "who's who" of Calcutta are there. Colorful Indian rajahs with their servants in native costume, wealthy natives and government officials, both British and Indian, rub elbows on the walks or swiftly pass in their foreign cars with chauffeurs whose costumes and uniforms represent myriad styles and colors of the East and West.

Fort William occupies much of the river side of the Maidan. Nearby are the Eden gardens. In the southeast corner Queen Victoria has been memorialized by a magnificent building in Italian Renaissance. Its central dome of pure white marble came from the same quarries from which the marble for the Taj Mahal was hewn. The white marble palace of the governor of Bengal, overlooking the Maidan from the north, was the residence of the Viceroy before the capital was removed to Delhi in 1912. This and the palatial residences, clubs and public buildings along the Maidan's eastern side, gave to Calcutta the name "The City of Palaces."

Darjeeling, nestling among the foothills of the Himalayas, is Bengal's summer resort. Like Simla, 700 miles farther west, and Srinagar in Kashmir, Darjeeling is a godsend to perspiring Europeans who must spend the hot period in India. But it is more than a cool retreat: it is a matchless observation post, when the clouds permit, for the mightiest mountain scenery that the world affords. Forty-five miles to the northward, across deep chasms and beyond tier after tier of foothills, rises Kinchinjunga, 28,156 feet high, buttressed by half a dozen peaks from 20,000 to 24,000 feet in altitude.

Perched on a Ridge.

Darjeeling stands on a sort of stage before and above which sweep the amphitheater slopes of Himalayan heights. The town is perched on and astride a steep ridge that rises about 7,000 feet from the Bengal plains. On the side toward the mountains the ridge drops away for approximately 6,000 feet, forming what might, in American terminology, be called "the Grand Canyon of the Ranjit;" but whose heavily forested slopes and tropically luxuriant floor earns in India the more poetic name of "Vale of Ranjit."

Darjeeling has characteristics unlike those of most towns. It can hardly be said to have streets. Most of the buildings face on paths or walks which run along the main ridge and out on to its minor spurs, or work their way by serpentine routes to other paths that cling to the steep sides of the slopes. Steps, too, serve in place of roads, connecting terraces that rise one above the other. One of the few carriage roads is a driveway that skirts the lower end of the main ridge and leads below to the suburb Lebong and its barracks for British soldiers.

The villas, bungalows, shops, government buildings, hospitals, churches, schools, barracks and native huts that make up Darjeeling and its suburb form pendant communities, like giant saddle-bags thrown over the ridge. Dwellings are scattered down the slopes for a thousand feet, the ground floors of one tier on a level with the roofs of the next tier below. If one must cover much space in Darjeeling he rides on pony back or is carried in a litter by four servants.

The center of Darjeeling is Observatory Hill, a knoll on the crest of the ridge. Topping the knoll is a Buddhist monument and surrounding it is a small forest of staffs from which prayer flags flutter their supplications. From the benches near the monument one may sit, when mist and clouds do not interfere, and take advantage of Darjeeling's best view of mighty Kinchinjunga and its fellows. But often the vigil is fruitless. It is only for relatively brief periods during the spring and early winter that one may be sure of long, uninterrupted views of the towering granite and ice walls and snowy slopes to the north.

POULTRY

SAVE THE POULTRY BY KILLING MITES

Simple Treatments to Get Rid of Lice.

(By O. C. UFFORD, Extension Poultryman, Colorado Agricultural College.—WNU Service.)

Many Colorado farmers and poultrymen save money and cut costs of production simply by preventing their poultry and poultry houses from becoming infested with lice and mites.

Lice and mite infestations affect the health, growth and production of poultry. These pests can be easily controlled by proper action. Lice, which live on the birds and are known as biting parasites, may be controlled by smearing a small amount of blue ointment mixed with an equal amount of petroleum jelly, lard or vaseline, around the vent. This treatment should never be used on small chicks. Dusting powders such as sodium fluoride may be placed in the feathers on different parts of the body to control lice.

When large flocks are to be treated for lice, nicotine sulphate may be applied with a brush or oil can to perches before the birds go to roost. Fumes from the nicotine destroy the parasites. This fluid will also kill mites if they come into contact with it. Badly infested flocks should be treated a second time in about ten days.

Mites live around perches and roosting places, gradually spreading over poultry houses and farm buildings when not controlled.

Stock dips, formaldehyde or carbolic acid are some of the common materials used for spraying roosts and houses. An effective home remedy can be made by using one gallon of crude crank case oil, one-half pint of stock dip or crude carbolic acid, and, if necessary, this may be thinned with one to two quarts of kerosene. The easiest time to control mites and lice is in the spring, before they become too numerous.

Flock Will Respond to Well-Balanced Ration

Eggs from chickens fed a ration full of vitamins A and D are better food than eggs from chickens fed rations less rich in these vitamins, according to the results of recent research available to the department of poultry husbandry at the Ohio State university.

Recent experiments indicate, says the department, that the amount of vitamin A and D supplied to the birds is directly reflected in the vitamin content of the eggs produced. Thus, in feeding his hens to maintain their health, the poultryman is feeding for eggs of better quality and more worth.

A ration for hens rich in vitamins would contain yellow corn, alfalfa leaf meal, or a high grade cod liver oil.

Vitamin D prevents rickets and assists with the building of bone. Vitamin A builds resistance to disease and infections.

Early and Late Chicks

Chicks hatched early have many advantages over those hatched late. As a general rule they are more vigorous; the mortality is less; the cockerels may be sold for better prices, and the pullets will mature in time to lay high-priced eggs next fall.

Just why the early chick is more vigorous is hard to explain. That less mortality is experienced is probably due to the fact that coccidia and parasites, such as worms and mites, are less active before the onset of hot weather. It is true that more trouble from these pests is experienced later in the season.

Poultry for Income

Science has placed the rate of mortality among chicken flocks so low that it is now no longer a major risk. As an income source, both from meat and eggs, poultry offers returns measured fairly accurately by the number of chicks to be used. The initial investment in equipment is offered today at most attractive prices and since the life of equipment extends over a long period of years, the annual investment may be considered very low.

Select Vigorous Chicks

Vigorous baby chicks have full bright eyes, downy fluff, are plump and have well rounded shanks. Other points to look for in selecting chicks include the following: Freedom from bacillary white diarrhea, weight of eight pounds per 100 chicks at 24 hours of age, well healed body openings at which yolk was absorbed and richly pigmented shanks and beaks. Chicks from healthy breeding flocks and from birds high in egg production are always preferable.—Nebraska Farmer.

Diarrhoea in Fowls

Diarrhoea may be caused by feeding spoiled food of some kind and garbage should be pretty carefully inspected before being fed. It may easily contain spoiled bits of meat or moldy food of some kind. A dose of epsom salts, one pound dissolved in the drinking water of 100 fowls, or dissolved in a little water and mixed with a wet mash, so distributed that all can get their share, may be given to clean out the digestive organs of the birds.—Rural New-Yorker.

STARS WILL ATTEND SHRINE CONVENTION

Visitors to San Francisco during the coming Shrine convention on July 26, 27 and 28, will find the old Spanish town gone Moslem. Minitaure mosques with turrets and towers rise on the street corners; the sword and crescent is omnipresent, and where on former festive days dashing dons would walk the streets, be-fezzed and scimitared Shriners in bright red pantaloons will swagger.

The mosques serve as picturesque information booths and ticket offices for the Shrine Civic Center outdoor stadium, which is rapidly nearing completion. A uniformed Shriner presides over each mosque and is prepared to answer any question or to sell a seat to the mammoth stadium which almost entirely encloses the Civic Center.

Moving picture stars, who are taking an active interest in both the Shrine convention and the Olympic Games at Los Angeles, which immediately follow the San Francisco fiesta, have adopted a sweater for summer use that promises to become a popular craze in America. It is used especially for tennis, riding or golf. The sweater is emblazoned with the scimitar and crescent of the Shrine and a discus thrower, representing the Olympic Games. It is short sleeved to the elbow and buttons at the throat, either high or low.

One of the most popular features of the Shrine convention will be the parades, final arrangements for which are being made. It has been decided to stage only one of the mammoth spectacles up Market street. The remaining three will be held in the Civic Center.

The following calendar has been announced for the parades:

Tuesday, July 26, 9 A. M.—Opening parade of the convention at stadium; uniformed Shrine bodies and imperial officers.

Wednesday, July 27, 10 A. M.—Shrine Mardi Gras of Industry along Market street to Civic Center; Shrine bodies and features.

Wednesday, July 27, 8 P. M.—Night parade of uniformed Shrine bodies, with electrical effects at Civic Center Stadium.

Thursday, July 28, 8 P. M.—Hollywood electrical motion picture pageant, Civic Center Stadium.

Electrical equipment from the motion picture studios of Hollywood which will be used to light the Shrine stadium in San Francisco, has arrived in San Francisco. Floats for the motion picture pageant are already under construction. Governor James Rolph is honorary chairman of the motion picture pageant, William M. Coffman is chairman, and Wallace Beery, vice-chairman. Harold Lloyd will be grand marshal of the parade.

The following stars have planned to be present: Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Joan Crawford, Ann Harding, Marion Davies, Wallace Beery, Nancy Carroll, Wynne Gibson, Monte Blue, Maureen O'Sullivan, George Bancroft, Virginia Bruce, Ruth Chatterton, Sari Maritza, Colleen Moore, Anita Page, and Laura La Plante. Louis B. Mayer, Jack Warner, Joseph Schenk and Al Rockett are among the motion picture producers who are actively interested in the pageant.

California cities, national and local industres and foreign nations have contributed magnificent floats to the Shrine Mardi Gras of Industry, which will be the only parade to pass the length of Market street.

Sierra Trails Call Tourist Beyond the Motor Routes

With good roads carrying the motorist within striking distance of most of the popular high Sierra trails, many opportunities are offered to leave the car for a while and set forth on foot or horseback into the heart of the great western mountain area, according to the touring bureau of the California State Automobile Association. July and August offer a particularly attractive time this year to invade the higher elevations. The high mountain season is short this summer, because the record snowfall of the past winter has been slow in melting, but this very abundance of snow is enticing many to try the new experience of a Sierra trail trip.

In the Sequoia, Kings' river, Kern, the Tahoe region, Yosemite, Owens Valley, the Feather river and Yuba river canyon country, the Lassen Park area, and other similar play regions mountain vacation trips afoot or in the saddle offer a refreshing change.

Those who would enjoy the marvels of High Yosemite have the choice of several plans. There are five High Sierra hikers' camps, located about a day's walk apart, making it possible for hikers to range far on their walks and yet end the day in a comfortable camp with a hearty meal and bed. Walking parties leave the valley every Sunday morning under the free guidance of a ranger-naturalist, returning the following Saturday evening. Weekly saddle parties also make a tour of the camps. Similar trips may be made from the Tuolumne Meadows, on the Tioga road.

From Giant Forest, in Sequoia National Park, a variety of short hikes may be made to beauty spots, such as Tokopah valley, Heather and Emerald lakes, Willow Meadow, Eagle View Point, and Moro Rock stairway and summit.

In Lassen Park, with its comparatively small area, it is possible for the hiker to reach most any point and return in a single day's journey.

WATCH SPEED SIGNS ENTERING TOWN AREA

Speeding in open country often creates a psychological condition that causes a driver to go too rapidly in restricted areas, it is revealed in recent studies, according to the California State Automobile Association.

After driving for several hours at a high rate of speed in the country, the operator sometimes loses, to a degree, his ability to judge speed. When he slows down, even slightly, he seems to be just loafing along.

Thus, when the driver approaches a town he slows down and may cut his speed in half. He thinks he is just crawling along when in reality he is still driving at a rate of speed too rapid for a busy city street. Since speed limit signs, posted by the Automobile Association, indicate the speed for such districts, motorists are cautioned to note the signs always and keep the speedometer indicator below the legal limit.

STATE WORKERS PUT ON FIVE-DAY WEEK

According to an announcement made by Governor Rolph last Tuesday, all State employees will be put on a five-day working week during the coming fiscal year.

The announcement came after a conference of the Governor and all major department heads of the state administration.

The new werking schedule, which will go into effect today, July 1, is expected to result in an annual saving of approximately $4,157,000. The salary reduction will amount to approximately 14¼ per cent, but no employe will lose his position, the Governor pointed out.

The adoption of the five-day week was made necessary by a slump of about 20 per cent in the state's revenues, it was stated.

Governor Rolph is quoted as saying: "As governor, I shall voluntarily go on a five-day week basis so far as salary is concerned, although I expect to work every day in the week as heretofore.

"No employe receiving $100 a month or less is to be affected."

More Honors Abroad For George Washington

In Warsaw it is "Aleja Jerzy Waszyngton"—in Rome it is "Viale Giorgio Washington"—in Bucharest it is "Perspecive a Washington"—in Guatemal it is "Avenida Washington" and in Berlin it is "Washington Platz."

All of which in good old United States means "Washington Avenue, Boulevard, Square," or whatever else the people of these countries have named in honor of George Washington.

Official reports to the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission reveal that, since the opening of the Bicentennial celebration on February 22, fourteen countries have named fourteen streets and seven squares and parks in honor of the First President of the United States.

These figures do not include the streets, parks and squares named in George Washington's honor prior to the beginning of the Bicentennial celebration, nor those which are contemplated before Thanksgiving day, the official closing day of the celebration. The United States minister to Albania has informed the Commission that the King of Albania is planning to name several streets in various cities of the country for George Washington, and other countries are making similar plans.

The cities and countries which have chosen this means of observing the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington are: Sofia, Bulgaria; Prague, Czechoslovakia; Berlin, Hamburg and Dresden, Germany; Saigon, French Indo-China; Guatemala City, Guatemala; Budapest and Sopron, Hungary; Rome and Florence, Italy; Riga and Jelgava, Latvia; Bergen, Norway, Cracow, Gdynia and Warsaw, Poland; Bucharest, Rumania; Belgrade, Ljubljana and Zagred, Yugoslavia, and Pretoria, Union of South Africa.

Robert Spencer Whitlow, 17, of Tulsa, Okla., won a free trip to Leauge of Nations than any other of Geneva for knowing more about the 10,000 high school boys who competed.

Bobby Gene Scott of Reno, Okla., at the early age of four years is recognized as an accomplished harmonica player.
